Recent Discoveries

I am now yet another Co-Founder of a recent business that sprung up quite suddenly in my High School. Basicly, this company (started by myself and a friend named Greg Margolis) sells computer parts as well as custom PC's to all the n00bz in my school. We also sell software tutorials and step-by-step documentations for many programs on different platforms. But, of course, we would never sell any pirated copies of games or applications ever, because that's illegal. (^_^) So far, personally, I've taken home over $125 in the first week. 20 weeks, and that's a r34lly bad-ass machine I could build. This Thursday, I'll make $85 for writing a few optimized cracks and and game files for some n00bz in my classes.

IN OTHER NEWS

The 3rd Annual "Rockets on Prisoner" Awards' has been postponed probably for the 22nd time since it's supposed release of nearly 8 weeks ago.

I just got Call of Duty 2 as well as Star Wars Battlefront 2, which, I must say, are 4w3s0m3 games. CoD 2 is really nice game technically as well as strategically, introducing many new environments that haven't been possible to re-create in prior game engines. Battlefront (the original) wasn't that great of a game, but it's sequel, Battlefront 2, really keeps the franchise alive, with content from all the Star Wars movies as well as in-depth Single Player gameplay.

The Wahttehhog lost their first "Rockets on Prisoner" Awards' competition. Next time.
